La campana de latón sobre la puerta del viejo local emitió un tintineo agudo cuando Crowley empujó el cristal esmerilado. Afuera, la lluvia de Soho caía con esa insistencia grisácea tan propia de Londres un martes por la tarde.

Detrás del mostrador de caoba, rodeado por pilas tambaleantes de primeras ediciones encuadernadas en piel, emergió una figura con chaleco de tweed y una taza de té humeante entre las manos.
```

—Buenas tardes —dijo Aziraphale. Su voz poseía esa calidez redonda y reconfortante de quien jamás ha tenido prisa en los últimos seis mil años—. Me temo que hoy estamos técnicamente cerrados por inventario, pero si busca refugio del aguacero...

Crowley se bajó las gafas oscuras medio milímetro por el puente de la nariz. Sus ojos dorados brillaron con una chispa peligrosa, casi felina.

—¿Cerrados? ¿Con el cartel de "Abierto" colgado al revés en la ventana, ángel?

Aziraphale parpadeó, desconcertado por el apelativo y por la repentina sensación eléctrica que acababa de cruzar la librería. Miró hacia la puerta, luego hacia el extraño de chaqueta negra y zancadas elásticas.

—Vaya. Parece que he cometido un error de cálculo —murmuró el librero, ofreciendo una sonrisa tímida—. En ese caso, supongo que el universo insiste en que compartamos el té. Tome asiento, señor...

—Crowley. Solo Crowley.

Y en ese instante, en medio de la penumbra perfumada a vainilla y polvo de estrellas, el tiempo pareció detenerse exactamente donde debía comenzar.`

John Watson dejó caer su libreta sobre la mesita auxiliar y suspiró hondo, estirando las piernas cansadas tras setenta y dos horas ininterrumpidas de persecución en los páramos.

Sherlock permanecía inmóvil junto a la ventana, recortado contra el resplandor plomizo de las farolas londinenses. El arco del violín se movía sobre las cuerdas con una precisión hipnótica: una frase musical suave, casi nostálgica, sin rastros de la furia intelectual con la que solía tocar cuando el aburrimiento lo devoraba.

—¿No vas a dormir, Sherlock? —preguntó John con voz ronca.

El detective no interrumpió la nota final. Dejó descansar el instrumento sobre el regazo y ladeó la cabeza.

—Dormir es un desperdicio biológico innecesario cuando el cerebro acaba de catalogar un espectro químico completamente nuevo, John.

—Claro, por supuesto. Y tus ojos hinchados son solo una alucinación de mi córnea —replicó John con ironía afectuosa, empujando la segunda taza de té humeante hacia el borde de la mesa—. Bébete esto antes de que se enfríe.`

Remus Lupin mantenía la punta de su varita iluminada con un 'Lumos' diminuto, apenas más brillante que una luciérnaga de verano. Pasaba la yema de los dedos sobre las runas antiguas de un grimorio de astronomía cuando una mano conocida se deslizó sobre su hombro.

—Te encontré, Lunático —susurró una voz cargada de complicidad traviesa.

Sirius se deslizó silenciosamente a su lado, oliendo a brisa nocturna y a humo de chimenea de Gryffindor. Llevaba la túnica desabrochada y esa sonrisa insolente que siempre lograba que el pulso de Remus se acelerara el doble.

—Madame Pince te colgará de los pulgares si nos atrapa aquí —reprendió Remus en un susurro, aunque sus labios traicionaron una media sonrisa.
